The Daily Press

HONGKONG, MAY 20TH, 1868.

WHEREVER the San Francisco mail sails on the present line, calls and arrives at dates which render it possible for us to receive late European news that way, the fullness and abundance of the telegrams makes us ashamed of the meagre scraps of intelligence which come by the Indian route. The San Francisco papers have long cable messages every day, and this, in spite of the fact that the news thus brought must be very unimportant to their readers as compared with the messages from Washington about the impeachment, or the multifarious domestic topics which are of interest to a people with a keen enthusiasm for politics, certainly it is impossible that the compilers of that perplexing message about Lord Clarendon or the readers whom it satisfies, can have much interest in the personal politics of Great Britain. The message first says that Viscount Chatsworth is dead" but in the same breath it refers to the eldest son of the deceased Peer going to the House of Lords. As Lord Salisbury is considerably turned of seventy, it is most likely to his death that the telegram really refers. The accession of Lord Cranborne to the family honours will not by any means be a bad thing for the Conservative party, if it should turn out to be as we suppose. The Government wants strength in the Upper House, and such a supporter as Lord Cranborne will be very welcome; one would say, by the present rather ponderous and phlegmatic holder of the Privy Seal.

By an indirect allusion in the telegram of the 16th, it is evident that the Government has, as we imagined it would do in the past, declined to resign in trust, in obedience to a direct vote on abstract resolutions about the Irish Church. It is easy to imagine that the gentlemen who appear to have figured at the meeting in St. James's Hall were indignant at the failure of the attempt to overthrow Disraeli's administration. The notion that Disraeli is "unconstitutional" for the Ministry to retain office after such a vote as that which has taken place, is simply absurd. The constitutional theory is perfectly well understood by the political world. Even if the vote just taken had been on a direct want of confidence motion, it would have been open to the cabinet to appeal to the country, as the existing house had been elected under a Whig Government,—but, in the first place, as the vote was on an abstract resolution, relating to a subject which is confused by violent feelings having no reference to politics whatever, it cannot be distorted even into an expression of a wish on the part of the House that the present Ministry should resign. It would only be unconstitutional for Disraeli to retain office after he had been defeated on a direct question of confidence by a house elected under a Conservative Government. Under such circumstances, retention of office by any Minister would not only be unconstitutional, but impossible. Such cuteries about unconstitutional conduct on the part of a cabinet are generally ridiculous, because no Government has the power of acting unconstitutionally in a country like England. The constitutional rules are simply the resultant force of the various co-operating forces, which go to make up the entire Government of the nation, and they can no more be defied than physical forces can be defied by inert matter.

The voluntary submission of the late Tycoon to the sentence passed on him by the Mikadi, finally sets at rest the theories concerning his semi-independent sovereignty, which used to be current when the affairs of Japan first occupied the attention of the Western world, and which, indeed, are most likely prevalent still amongst the careless majority of newspaper readers at home. The government of Japan evidently does not possess that complicated and mysterious character at first attributed to it, and the Mikado, far from being a mere "spiritual emperor," an idol mocked by sham reverence, without power or authority in worldly affairs. It is plain now that he is simply the sovereign of the country, and in no way bound down by any extraordinary laws of etiquet, which forbid him to remove from his own capital or prevent foreigners from obtaining access to his presence. As we have already seen, he has been visiting foreign ships of war at Hiogo; he has received the ministers, and he has established his authority at Yeddo in a manner which cannot be mistaken. The Tycoons have never been more than his vassals, even though they have been the most powerful of all feudal vassals. Beyond the unpleasant chance of being cut down by the long sword of a Japanese gentleman of the old school, opposed to new fangled innovations and antipathetic to Europeans, there is nothing now to interfere with the progress of foreign trade in Japan. It is only likely to be limited in a few years time by the consuming power of the people, which, of courses, is not indefinite, though it is probably far in advance of any indications which have yet been given.

A TRAGIC ANECDOTE.—An incident, which has just occurred at Paris, has produced a considerable sensation in military circles. Captain B——, of the 20th Battalion of Chasseurs, whose ship Ly was to be present with his company at Long Ly review before the Emperor on Tuesday, failed to make his appearance, for some reason has stated. He was in consequence severely reprimanded, and ordered under arrest for some days. Smarting under this disgrace, he sat up all night regulating the accounts of his company, and in the morning he called the men together, reviewed them, and saying, "I now had you adieu," pulled a revolver from his pocket, placed the muzzle at his breast, and fired. The ball, however, was turned aside by the Cross of the Legion of Honour; but he immediately discharged another barrel, and fell, bathed in blood, from a dangerous wound near the heart.

It is needless to point out that the article was written before the arrival of the English Mail.

Police Intelligence.

BEFORE E. R. GOODLAKE, ESQ.

UNLICENSED MARINE STORES.

Three Chinese were charged with keeping unlicensed marine stores.

Mr. H. C. Caldwell appeared for the defendants.

Constable Hawes who prosecuted, withdrew the charge against one of the defendant's, and having described the contents of the shops of the other two (6 pounds of Old naval miscellaneous collection found in these traders' stores,

Mr. Caldwell said that under the Ordinance No. 19 of 1867, as high as a $500 fine could be inflicted by the magistrate, but as the defendants had pleaded guilty, he should only impose a fine of $10, at the same time recommending them to take out licenses if possible.

Mr. The Fabior Row.

It may be remembered, in our report of yesterday, we mentioned the case in which some of the family of Kwan-a-kwei were sentenced by Mr. Goodlake to three weeks' imprisonment. We were again brought up to-day for the case to be re-heard, when his Worship having given some sound advice to the defendants, he reassessed them on one case at $50 each, for forty miles from the police for one year towards the compound.

Mr. Manslaughter of Abdul Khan.

The prisoners in the dock were brought up this afternoon at 3 o'clock, but the case was remanded until to-morrow.

Inquest.

An inquest was held yesterday afternoon on the body of Robert Hudgeson, late chief officer of the steamship Arcadian Argus, before F. Stewart, Esq., the coroner, and the following jury:—Thomas Algar, foreman; Claus Budde and J. C. B. Bourjau.

The first witness called on the case was the sergeant of Police [Chinese], who found the body of deceased, and he said that he was sent out to Bull Cove harbour on Saturday last, and about half-past three on that day he found deceased floating under a steamer near Green Island. He took the body to the Water Police Station.

Captain Henry, the master of the Arcadian Argus, said deceased was clerk on board his steamer, and was thirty-three years of age. On Thursday last, the 14th inst., deceased asked witness if he could get leave to go on shore, and witness gave him permission to do so. Deceased came on board again on Friday morning, and asked witness if he could get leave to go on shore on Saturday evening, which he also granted. Deceased was absent during that time, and witness did not see him again, except on the batch coming to London. Those coming might have been stolen from the vessel out. There was no enticement before the court to connect the piece of velvet in question with case No. 2995, and there was no evidence to prove that this velvet cloth was found in the shop was not sold to them in a regular way. There was not the slightest evidence to connect this piece of velvet with the prisoner. There was no proof to show that the velvet was in the cargo boat was not their own, and, further there was no evidence to show that this piece of velvet in court, or even in account of it.

His Lordship said he thought there was some evidence and enough to go to the jury.

Mr. Hayllar then proceeded to address the jury. Sifting the evidence down to the simple fact, was the man Lee-a-mpon the witness of Cook, or not. Was there to be the least doubt about it? Nothing he had said. The three witnesses on the cargo boat was not, in the whole case hung on the words of this man and he put it whether, considering the large reward that had been offered, this witness was not inclined to come and tell a false story. After pointing out the discrepancies in the evidence of this witness, he concluded by asking for a verdict for the defendant.

His Lordship then proceeded to sum up. He touch Mr. Hayllar on his objection to a witness the evidence before the court to be admitted. The evidence of this witness was admitted, he said the case from the decision of the jury, unless there was not a little of evidence of any kind. There there was evidence and it was for them to decide how much. In summarizing the evidence of the man Lee-a-mpon, His Lordship pointed out the fact that this witness had appeared to be on friendly terms with the deceased, and that he had been in the habit of visiting deceased on board the vessel. The prisoner was arraigned on the charge, and pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Hayllar, instructed by Mr. Sharp, appeared on behalf of the prisoner.

It appears that Messrs. Reiss & Co. had a consignment of goods per Carnarthenshire from Liverpool, which they received on the 10th inst., a bill of lading for 377 packages, was given on the arrival of the ship in February last, to Messrs. Morgan, Lambert & Co. to take delivery of and store until called for; but on the goods being landed, out of five cases of velvet that should have been received, only four were delivered. The missing case was numbered 2995, and marked L.R. in a triangle. The goods were landed by one of Messrs. Morgan, Lambert's coolies in the charge of the prisoner. The disappearance of this package was not, however, discovered until all the cargo of the Carnarthenshire had been discharged, and just previously intelligence had been received by the captain of the ship was hearing for Saigon the captain offered a reward for the recovery of the missing parcel. On his return to the present month the prisoner was arrested and charged as above. The most important witness in this case, and whose evidence narrates the principal facts of the robbery, was that of a man named Lee-a-mpon, who had for seventy years been employed as a coolie on board the ship Carnarthenshire, belonging to Messrs. Morgan, Lambert & Co. He deposed that on the evening of the 15th of February, about 8 o'clock, he went on board cargo-boat No. 9, belonging to the same company, for the purpose of smoking and talking with some friends. While down in the forehold this emigrant he suddenly heard a crashing noise of wood being broken, and on ascending on deck found that a hole had been made through a small hole there was in the partition between the fore and main hold, he saw two men breaking open a case of velvet. He saw one of these men hand a piece of velvet passed on deck and into an old marine-store boat that was alongside, belonging to a man named Quok-yee-fook. The prisoner was at the time on the deck of the boat, looking around. This witness went on board the cargo-boat No. 9 on the 3rd of March, and on this occasion saw the same men on board, who were there on the 19th of February. The man Quok-yee-fook, he saw hand over a bag of dollars to the prisoner, saying, "Here is 30 taels and 8 mace," and the prisoner replied, "Very well, I'll take that." The prisoner then took the bag of dollars down the after hatch, and the other two men left the boat. Witness remained on board the boat, and spent the evening with his friend forward, leaving about eleven o'clock. It was for the purpose he went on board the boat. His friend's name was A Foo. The name of the other man who accompanied Kwok-yee-fook, was Sam-chong; he lives at Shan-pay-p-a village at the west end of Kowloon. He kept a marine store and boat, called the Cheong-hing. This shop was visited on the 6th of May by Inspector Daly, on occasion of some information he received. He there found a roll of velvet, which he took possession of, as well as the books of the shop. This piece of velvet was produced in court, and from the evidence of Ti-po-yee, the compradore to Messrs. Reiss and Co., and Mr Ziemssen, managing partner in said house, fully identified as a piece of velvet manufactured and put by their firm in England, and in all particulars precisely similar to the velvet in the four cases of this lot of five that were delivered. The books of the mart, a shop were produced, but no objection of Mr. Hayllar were raised both.

Lie-a-wah, one of the landing coolies in the employ of Messrs. Morgan, Lambert and Co., deposed that he took delivery of the goods of Messrs. Reiss and Co. from the Carnarthenshire, and the velvet was delivered on the 15th of February. Only four were delivered, the missing case being No. 2,995. He had never seen this case either on the ship or in the cargo boat.

The mate of the Carnarthenshire deposed to taking these five cases of velvet on board in London, but he did not see but four delivered here. This was in brief the case for prosecution.

Mr. Hayllar on behalf of the prisoner here submitted that there was no case to go to the jury. That there was no proof that these goods ever reached Hongkong. No proof that the goods ever got into the hold of the ship, since the mate had not seen them, except on the batch coming to London. Those coming might have been stolen from the vessel out. There was no evidence before the court to connect the piece of velvet in question with case No. 2995, and there was no evidence to prove that this velvet cloth was found in the shop was not sold to them in a regular way. There was not the slightest evidence to connect this piece of velvet with the prisoner. There was no proof to show that the velvet was in the cargo boat was not their own, and, further there was no evidence to show that this piece of velvet in court, or even in account of it.

His Lordship said he thought there was some evidence and enough to go to the jury.

It clearly in his power to do great mischief both to Jap n and ourselves. Until he and his friends ambush or are crushed, there is little hope of revis l of trade.

It must be allowed that he has been very hardly used, and he evidently feels it. We hear that, in reply to the proclamation of his outlawry, he has published a notification to his own people, complaining that he has been outlawed without being heard, expressing his conviction that the sentence is not that of the Mikado, but a forgery of his old enemy Chiosin; and claiming his right to present himself before his sovereign to justify himself. He declares that, should the Mikado himself ratify the sentence, he will commit hara-kiri before him, but should he find that his Majesty has not issued this sentence of his own free will, that he will fight to the death against his enemies.

Such an appeal to his retainers is not unfrequently made by a Daimio in a great strait, both to place on record his own sentiments, and to ascertain the temper of his people. We had an example of it in the case of Chiosin, when the late Shogoon proclaimed war against him. In this case the chief, however, hardly stands in a good chance of support. The name of the Mikado is an immense power, the name of the Shogoon excited wrath rather than fear. We have not yet heard how Iyeasu appeal to his people has been received, but there seems little reason to doubt that opinion is divided amongst them as to the policy of their chief. And as each day's delay strengthens the Mikado and his new cabinet, so day by day our hope that peace will soon be restored to the country becomes stronger and stronger still.

The strength of the English squadron in these seas is under orders to assemble in Osaka Bay on the 15th inst. The Rodney leaves us to-day and the Ocean to-morrow, the Rattler will take down the mail and the Rinaldo is already there. The Sabrina will take down Sir Harry Parkes. The object of this accumulation is purely peaceful: to assist at the ceremony of the presentation by the British Minister of his credentials from the home government, as Representative of Great Britain at the Court of the Mikado. Hitherto, it must be remembered, he has been accredited only to the Shogoon.

Yesterday four gentlemen were by Kanagawa to Daibutsu. On returning, the pony of one of them showed such symptoms of distress as induced the rider to dismount and lead him to the others still riding, and of course getting on a little way ahead. Close to the Daimio's gate, about fifty men had been seen drilling, and strangely enough, as the approach of the quarternion of equestrians, they all turned as a man to see them. On reaching a certain turn of the road, the gentleman who had dismounted, saw a well dressed two-sworded man, who already bestowed eyes upon him, whipped his long sword out of its sheath, bringing it over his left shoulder. The foreigner sprang quickly to the other side of his pony and also drew quickly, but the other side of his pony rather hid him from view, with more celerity than could be that of the Japanese that they could not tell at imagine who or what the man could be.

It is to be hoped that it is well always to be armed. Very rarely indeed will foreigners be called on to defend themselves: but it is well to carry revolvers, that all may know it to be the custom, and not thus by the apprehension of consequences be deterred from making any assault.

Paris Theatricals.

The Paris Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph writes:—

Last night Mdlle. Patti sang; for the first time in Paris, in "Traviata." In spite of the orchestra, which, as I shall tell you, for reasons, had a "pain in its temper," and played badly, it was a great success. Mdlle. Patti must have been excited, for certainly never sang so well in his life. Patti was splendid in Lucrezia, and those critics who say that Rosina in Betti, should have heard the last act of the "Promessi Sposi"—the singing was perfect, the acting dramatic. Gassi, too, sang very well, and it rained bouquets. But the orchestra was awful, and the scenery is this. The performances for which all prices were doubled, was for the charity of "L'Asile St. Joseph," over which the Duchess Thascher de la Pagerie presides, and all the smarts gave her their services gratis. Now, charity here is more vocal than instrumental, and the orchestra, after having grumbled at having no pay, was determined, when asked at having no pay, was determined, when asked at an hour later, noisy: thus all was forgotten when the scene was produced: Isouard her Opéra in Nissa had floated off the name of the Opera. The Vengeur, with all hands on board, went down with the curtain, at the Gaiété. The anticipated row—riot—fiasco—broke over it was to have been, with which your Paris and London contemporaries have been so occupied, was apparently "postponed by the consent of all parties;" at any rate, from what I can hear, there was no "riot," except that of the exhausted audience who were eager for the orgie which they had paid and long suffered to see. As the Francais there is just now one of those little comedettes which are amusing, well played, and very French—"Le Baiser Anonyme," by MM. Alberic Second and Jules Blasiry. It is a trifle light as air, but a pleasant and not unfashionable trifle, no moral to disengage, and may be safely taken after dinner. Gaston de Morane is one of the then "lions" of Paris, who, having been married early, comes on you about ten years after you have seen him one last "at," and so, while loving his wife a good deal, thinks it is permitted to love other ladies a little. To this end, he, while having an inspiring office at Paris, I think, should above have put at last young Frenchman on his guard—when a French wife has a headache, depend on it she assume mistrust of some every, he thinks he will go to a ball redoutant—full of society, et ca sans dire—so he gets a Halbardier's uniform, and goes off to the revels, rather a good looking fool than otherwise. He gets a good deal "interested" that at last he captivated by a black domino, with rose coloured bows, and lives happy till she quits the scene. At parting the domino—like a fool domino as she is, and I am the domino—like a fool domino as she is, and I have to state that the Saxon has entirely died out. Misses the Halbardier and whispers, "My Gaston, I love thee!" Then she leaves him and tries to disappear; but he follows these rules to mention, and leaves the coachman told to drive to "120, Rue de Varennes." There lives a widow, charming and young, and with the additional attraction of being his wife's most intimate friend. He goes to bed, knowing what he will do after d'jouer to-morrow; but, before that event comes off, his most intimate friend calls to ask him to be "best man" at his wedding with this very widow. He wishes to warn his friend, but noblesse oblige; so he only whispers things about marriage, which make his friend utterly unhappy and the jested with his chance. Then the widow calls, and tells a story of a sad last Halbardier, who is sadly in love with her aunt, aged 30, who resist Madame de——'s, in a black domino and red rosettes. Consternation, and fear of club badinage on the part of M. Gaston. He rushes off to the address of the old lady, and finds she has not been in Paris for a months

He is certain it must be the widow; but, in trying to get such an admission, he finds out it was bonnaid. His horror and positive dread of club criticism and chaff showing how severe has been his punishment, his wife repeats, and says that she sees the back domino with red rosettes, and had come in the widow's carriage. The moral of this story is clear. If a married man flirts, he should not flirt with any friend of his wife's, unless he is sure she is in earnest. and should, as a rule, avoid masks, unless they have given him the carnique.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE

Hongkong, Tuesday Evening.

There has been a moderate inquiry for Bengal Drugs, New Patna having changed hands at $635 to $637, Benares $630 to $632½. Nothing doing in Malwa. The following are the closing rates, with more sellers than buyers:—New Patna $635 to $637½; New Benares $621½ to $623½; Malwa $577½ to $760.

Trade of all descriptions remains remarkably quiet. There have been a few sales to-day, and the native dealers have been inquiring somewhat for Yarn, but in all cases offering far below the market rates, which no one will accept. The sales of piece goods reported embrace 1,500 pieces T. B. T. Cloths @ reel, to a price, $2271. 500 pieces 6 lbs. T. Cloths at $4.00 100 bales Bombay Yarn No. 16/24 at $110 to $115, 50 bales No 18/24 at $130, and 25 bales 32/32 at $185. Raw Cotton is in some request and 175 bales Bengal have been sold to-day at $16.50 to $21.00, and 250 bales Bombay Staple at $22.00 to $24.75. The Share market is very dull. Oriental Bank are in demand at 15 premium, with no sellers in the market. There are small sellers of New Bank at 3½ premium. There have been a sale also of Union Bank at 19 discount. Hotel are firm, and sellers at 18 discount.

By the China, San Francisco dates to the 18th ult. are at hand, in the Commercial Herald, we read:—

Imports of Rice from January 1st to March 31st: China, 2,010,526 lbs; Burmah, 119,152 lbs; Siam, 1,276,342 lbs.

There appears also a slight increase in the consumptive demand, with sales of 2,000 mats China, in bags, at 4¾ to 6¼; 1,500 mats Siam, 5¼; Hawaiian Table is held at 3¾ to 5c per lb.

There is a fair jobbing demand for teas, with moderate sales—say 500 half chests Japans reported at 67½ to 70 cents; lacquered boxes same, 70 to 85 cents; 100 half chests, in lots, 82½ cents. The present unsettled state of the market is mainly attributable to the fact that jobbers, retailers, etc., have all turned importers. The retailers, etc., have all turned importers. The retailers are mostly now supplied from their own importations, and are not disposed to purchase at present. The steamers have revolutionized the business.

Mr. Gladstone's Convexion.

"From the" Saturday Review.")

There is nothing which ought to cause surprise in a statesman's conversion. That he is a statesman is a sufficient reason for his liability to change. We might go further, and lay it down that no man is worthy of the statesman's name who is not open, not only to new views, but to the constant and recurrent necessity of adapting himself to circumstances. Popular language, when it speaks of the political mind as distinguished from the doctrinaire, witnesses not only to a practical truth, but to its absolute and ruling necessity in the art of government. China, the Papacy, the old Austrian policy, Bourbonism are proverbial instances of what comes of an iron consistency and the Non Possumus. But as far as history—and the Non Possumus. But as far as history—especially recent political history—goes, we always expect a justification when a statesman suddenly ports the helm; and though it is not only unedifying, but may be the highest honour, to a man to preach conscientiously the faith which he has conscientiously presented, yet an apology, in the best sense of the term, is demanded; and the more complete, minute, and exhaustive the apology is, the better it is received. In theological matters it is the other way. In the world's history that an Augustine or a Newman can take all mankind into the communings of a noble heart, and go through, with an eastern and awful revelation, the workings of the inner man, and successively pause at the stages at which a doubt was dimly suggested, and show how it expanded in volume and influence until it at last took the imperious attitude of conviction. This is the finest possible exercise of candour. It is not given to every man, and in most cases the autobiography of converts is worthless, if not impertinent. In politics, at least, though a justification has always been demanded for a statesman's change of opinions, it has generally been found sufficient in sound property to use its brevity and condensation. The Duke of Wellington conceded Emancipation because he would not accept the alternative of equal nobility of mind and candour he admitted, he at last knew more than he knew before, and adopted Free-trade because, as with law and adopted Free-trade because, as with Cobden's logic and superior insight and Mr. Cobden's logic and superior insight, were too much for him. Even Lord Derby put out an apology, whether substantial and moral is not the question, but at any rate intelligible, for passing the late Reform Act, when he said that he and his colleagues were resolved, seeing that the business must be settled, to settle it when they were in office. It was because Pox and Lord North could produce no justification for their coalition that both have been damned to everlasting fame. It is because the Whigs gained office on the Appropriation Clause, and when in office abandoned it, and for no reason except one too sordid to allow, that they thenceforth lost the confidence of the country. History reads a uniform lesson, that while so-called consistency is nearly always a mistake, and may even be a crime, a conversion needs to be justified. How grave the matter with Mr. Gladstone? That he has abandoned nearly every principle, and has drifted away from every conviction, which he once held, is no discredit in itself, and may be a duty to him. We are far from saying that his immediate attitude towards the Irish Church is not justifiable. On the contrary, we say without hesitation that there are the strongest grounds for that conclusion. But the conclusion must be disestablished; that is, there are grounds on which this or that politician may fairly come to this conclusion. The reasoning is external, and they may be cogent in this or that case, but they are relative to every man who adopts them in connexion with other things. Abstractedly, no matter of State policy stands simply alone, and out of connexion and relation with other things. The disestablishment of the Irish Church stands in logical connexion with certain great principles in Mr. Bright's mind, or in Mr. Mill's mind. With them it is all fair and consequential. It is so with Mr. Gladstone? We think nothing of the mere taunt that, less than three years ago, Mr. Gladstone so scouted the notion of disestablishment that he would not concession to debate it seriously. It is perfectly fair, as a mere bit of conventional polemics, to justify the present Government in declining to take up the subject, by observing that their rivals have always done just the same thing. But all this amounts to little, as far as Mr. Gladstone is concerned; if he were ready with any reason, or any justification, or any palliation for his change of opinion, or any plausible reason for his silence upon none. As far we can make out, he ventures upon none.

What we know of Mr. Gladstone's mind is this—that his wide-accessive and opposite views are not ex bloc. He vindicated the Church as it were ex bloc. He vindicated the Church and State theory, or rather upon a new one of his own, which was neither Hooker's nor Warburton's, nor anybody's else, upon certain intellectual and moral grounds. As time went on he abandoned this view; or, rather, what we he abandoned this view; or, rather, what we wish to point out is, that he did not abandon it. He has only adopted the precise opposite. It usually happens with thoughtful men that their early impressions are gradually modified, that conviction-ments are gradually modified, that conviction comes slowly and by degrees, that the man and mind are insensibly transformed. It is as in a book or an argument where sentence joins on to sentence. But in Mr. Gladstone's case he always came to a full stop at the end of a page; he turns it, and you then get the exact opposite of the principle in the matter of time the view of the Church into the Atlantic rather than keep it up. Not one considerations are above or below Mr. Gladstone. He is only resolved on one course. He will move an abstract question, that expediency, and assume of statesmanship; and motion and assume of statesmanship; and the only justification of his policy is that it is right. Its things stand, and to the absence of a better estimate. If Mr. Gladstone's view of a better estimate. If Mr. Gladstone's view is right, ergo it will find it in the fact that he is right. The justification is really not a not in office. The justification is really not a but one; anyhow it is better than none at all. But it may just as well be acknowledged.
